1. FROM THE CEO'S DESK: THE OFFER

I had thirty days but used twenty-nine of them being careful. The land was in Fannin County, forty-five minutes past where Dallas stops pretending it's still Dallas. It was a 126 acres cattle-cleared land with a creek running along the back line that the seller didn't even mention because to him it was just water and not a feature. I stood out there in June heat that makes your shirt stick to your back before you have done anything to earn it, and I remember thinking as clear as anything that this is the one.

Then I went home and did the thing that ruins more deals than bad money ever has. I started being smart about it. I ran comps I already knew, called the agent with questions I already had the answers to, just to hear someone else say them back to me. I told my wife I was "still weighing it," which is a phrase that sounds responsible but means nothing.

Day 29, I drove back out there, stood at the same fence line, and for the first time let myself admit what I was actually doing wasn't due diligence, it was hiding that was dressed up in spreadsheets and phone calls, but underneath it, I was scared of being wrong in a way that costs money and doesn't come with a rehearsal.

Day 31, I found out via text from my agent that: "Bonham land went under contract. Cash. Fast."

Here is the part I didn't understand until much later, turning it over on nights I couldn't sleep: I didn't lose that land to a better buyer, rather I lost it to somebody who was simply done deciding before I was, just done being afraid faster than I was. I signed the next offer in four days but I also don't lie to myself about why it happened in four days instead of thirty

This issue is about what waiting actually costs, not as a feeling nor a regret you carry around and never quantify. Somewhere there's a version of me still standing at that fence line, still weighing it. He is not real!

But the guy who signed in four days is, and he is the only one of us who ever got to keep anything.

With warmth,

Alkingbade Akinfenwa

2. THE FINE PRINT

There is a clause in every contract that nobody reads twice, it is not the one about earnest money, or survey deadlines, or who pays for the title search. It is the one you write yourself, without even meaning to; three words long, standard font, no one ever asks you to initial it:

I'll do it later.

Nobody puts a number next to that clause and that is the trick of it. It doesn't feel like a cost, because nothing gets taken from you the moment you sign it, just a quiet agreement with yourself that today isn't the day and a promise, unspoken, that some future day will be easier, cheaper, more certain than this one.

“

It never is and that's just what land does while you are waiting to feel ready for it. Texas rural land has continued to appreciate, with Northeast Texas recording a 12.17% five-year compound annual growth rate through Q4 2025 and nobody sends a notice when that clock ticks over because the acre stays the same; same fence line, same dirt, same view but the number attached to it moves without asking your permission, on a schedule that has nothing to do with when you feel ready.

HERE IS WHAT THAT LOOKS LIKE ACROSS THE MARKETS:

Market	County	What the Data Actually Shows	The Fine Print
Bonham	Fannin	Fannin County reached 39,265 people in 2025 up 9.6% since 2020 . The county recorded about $363M in retail sales in 2022. (Census.gov)	Growth creates demand, and demand gives land a reason to keep being noticed.
Leonard	Fannin	Leonard sits within a county experiencing 9.6% population growth since 2020 , alongside major infrastructure investment including Bois d'Arc Lake and its Leonard water-treatment facility.	Infrastructure doesn't just change a place; it can change how the land around it is viewed.
Honey Grove	Fannin	Honey Grove is part of Fannin County's growing population and economic base , with the county recording $363M in retail sales and more than $116M in health-care revenue in 2022. (Census.gov)	Sometimes the bigger story is not the town alone, but the strength of the county around it.
Wolfe City	Hunt	Hunt County reached 123,336 people in 2025, up 23.4% since 2020 . It recorded about $1.82B in retail sales , with employment growing 3.6% in 2023 . (Census.gov)	Small communities can sit inside much bigger growth stories.
Roxton	Lamar	Roxton sits within Northeast Texas, where rural land reached $13,159/acre in Q4 2025 , up 2.22% year-over-year , with a 12.17% five-year annual growth rate .	Quiet does not mean stagnant. Sometimes it means there is still room for the next chapter.
Gainesville	Cooke	Cooke County is part of the broader North Texas growth corridor, while Northeast Texas rural land values reached $39,965/acre in Q4 2025 , up 2.22% YoY . (Texas Real Estate Research Center)	Land doesn't have to be in the middle of the crowd to benefit from the movement around it.

Prices don't wait for your certainty, they move on their own schedule driven by people who decided faster than you did. The seller who was flexible on terms in January isn't returning calls by June, because he found someone who stopped negotiating with himself long enough to say yes. Most people don't lose land to bad decisions, rather they lose it to the space between deciding and doing; the part that feels responsible, feels careful, feels like nothing is happening yet. Something is always happening.

So before you tell yourself you will do it later, read the fine print first.

The only question left is whether you knew what you agreed to.

3. THE CONTINGENCY

In real estate, a contingency is a mercy; a clause that lets you walk if the numbers don't hold up. The one most people carry isn't in any contract because it was neither drafted nor signed, and it doesn't protect you from a bad deal, it only protects you from ever having to make one.

I'll wait and see.

That's the whole clause, Six words, and it feels like wisdom every time you say it. Here is what "waiting and see" has actually been missing, while it felt like patience.

“

Bois d'Arc Lake 16,600 acres, 86 miles of new shoreline is the first major reservoir built in Texas this generation, and it sits right at Bonham's edge, already reshaping everything around it. Hunt County, home to Wolfe City, has grown 47.6% since 2010, nearly half a county added while people were still deciding. Fannin County alone has over $531 million in land currently changing hands, real dollars moving through Leonard and Honey Grove whether or not anyone was ready to be part of it.

Gainesville sits on I-35, an hour from DFW, catching the same northward push that's driven Texas rural land up 8 to 12% a year since 2020. Roxton and Lamar County sit quietly inside that same corridor, the kind of quiet that in every one of these towns, has historically come right before it isn't quiet anymore.

None of that paused for anyone's out clause because while Lakes got built, Counties grew and corridors filled in. The wait-and-see clause was never actually protecting anyone from risk, it was just a graceful way of watching from the sideline while the land markets kept moving without asking who was ready.

The land never offered you a contingency; rather you chose to write your own and called it caution. Caution, unlike a real contingency, doesn't come with an expiration date you can see coming. It just quietly outlives its usefulness, one "still deciding" at a time, until the thing you were protecting yourself from was never the deal at all. It was the version of you who might have said yes. That's the part nobody puts in writing: the safest-feeling clause in the whole packet is also the only one with no way to walk it back once the moment it was guarding has already passed.

4. THE APPRAISAL: LOST & FOUND

Filed under: things that looked ordinary until the numbers started talking.

There is a funny thing about land: it rarely looks valuable before it becomes valuable. A road is just a road, a small town is just a small town, and a reservoir is just water until you connect the dots. So, we opened the LOST & FOUND drawer: a collection of places across North Texas that may look ordinary today, but tell a very different story when you look at the numbers.

ITEM NO. 1 — THE WATER THAT STOPPED BEING A RUMOR

Location: Leonard, Bonham Honeygrove and surrounding Fannin County.

Status: Changing quietly.

For years, Bois d'Arc Lake sounded like a future story. Now, it is infrastructure.

The broader water program represents about $1.6 billion in investment, the lake covers roughly 16,600 acres, while its Leonard treatment plant began delivering water in 2023 and has an initial capacity of about 70 million gallons per day, with room to expand to 280 million gallons per day.

The project is helping serve more than 2 million North Texans and has brought hundreds of millions of dollars in economic activity to Fannin County.

Fannin County had an estimated 39,265 residents in 2025, up 9.6% from 2020 with Bonham alone reaching about 11,263 residents, while its 2022 retail sales were approximately $166 million. That tells us something simple: it isn't just somewhere people live, people shop, work, receive services and spend money same as communities like Leonard and Honey Grove, sitting inside the same larger growth story.

The mistake is looking at the population of one town and missing the movement around it.

Original description: Future water project.

Updated description: The future already has water.

ITEM NO. 2 — WOLFE CITY AND THE 23.4% CLUE

Location: Wolfe City, Greenville and the wider Hunt County area.

Hunt County reached an estimated 123,336 people in 2025, its population grew 23.4% from its 2020 base more than 23,000 additional people. People bring demand and demand follows roads, homes, businesses and services. Hunt County's retail sales alone were about $1.82 billion in 2022.

ITEM NO. 3 — ROXTON, REAL ECONOMIC STORY

Location: Roxton, Lamar County.

Roxton story is bigger than its population as it sits within Lamar County, where the population reached about 51,500 in 2025, with more than 19,700 people employed across the county. Employer employment also grew 3% in 2023, while the county generated more than $1.24 billion in retail sales and $398 million in health-care and social-assistance revenue.

There is the advantage of being close to Paris, the county's major commercial centre. For land, that combination matters: a small community, a functioning regional economy, and room for the future. Roxton isn't about being the biggest place on the map.

It is about being well-positioned on it.

ITEM NO. 5 — GAINESVILLE, BIGGER THAN ITS POPULATION

Location: Gainesville, Cooke County.

Cooke County reached roughly 45,250 people in 2025, up from about 43,048 in 2022. Gainesville functions as a regional centre for manufacturing, retail, construction, transportation, finance and services. This matters because land value rarely moves on population alone. It responds to: People + jobs + roads + services + demand.

Gainesville has pieces of all five.

ITEM NO. 6 — THE SECOND WATER STORY

Location: Fannin County.

Bois d'Arc Lake isn't the only major water investment changing this part of Texas. Lake Ralph Hall is being developed in Fannin County with an expected yield of about 39,220 acre-feet of water annually, roughly 54 million gallons per day. A 32-mile water pipeline was completed in 2025.

Two major water stories. One county.

With communities like Leonard, Bonham and Honey Grove sitting inside that geography, that's enough to make anyone studying land take another look at the map.

ITEM NO. 7 — 53,658 NEW NEIGHBORS

Location: Collin County and the northern edge of DFW.

Between 2023 and 2024, Collin County added approximately 53,658 residents. That's more people arriving in one year than many entire North Texas towns have residents, and people don't disappear at the county line. Growth pushes outward, it looks for housing, roads, businesses and land. That's why the story of Collin County matters even when you're looking north toward places like Leonard, Wolfe City or Gainesville.

Land rarely announces when its value is about to change, it simply sits quietly while everything around it evolves. Water arrives in Leonard. Bonham grows. Honey Grove finds itself within a changing Fannin County. Wolfe City and Hunt County expands, while Roxton grows quietly and Gainesville strengthens its role as a regional centre. Slowly, the map is being rewritten.

That is the real appraisal, not simply asking, "What is this land worth today?" but, more importantly, "What is changing around it that could make tomorrow's answer different?"

Because when an opportunity sits unclaimed for too long, someone else eventually picks it up. Then you realise it was never lost at all.

You simply weren't looking at the right map.

5. THE WALKTHROUGH

Let's be honest with each other for a second.

You have been "thinking about it" for a while now, maybe since spring or even longer. You have saved a few listings, asked a few questions, told yourself you would move when things felt more certain while in the meantime, life kept happening; bills, work, "not right now" yet, the land kept sitting there, patiently, like it owed you the wait.

The part nobody tells you plainly enough is that Texas is losing farmland and ranchland at a rate of about 887 acres a day, not over a decade. A day! It's now the most threatened farmland state in the entire country, on track to lose another 18 million acres by 2040, an area bigger than South Carolina. The land disappearing fastest isn't out in the middle of nowhere, it is the land closest to growing cities, closest to you, right now, still sitting there under a "maybe."

This is just what's happening while you are still deciding.

So picture it plainly: the acre you have had your eye on isn't guaranteed to still be an acre by the time you're "ready." It might be a subdivision, a parking lot, somebody else's name on the deed, somebody who simply stopped waiting before you did. Land doesn't hold a spot for you because it doesn't know you were interested, it just gets sold, developed, gone and the only people who ever get to say "I bought at the right time" are the ones who stopped calling it the wrong time.

We have watched this play out enough times to know exactly how it goes, someone hesitates for six months then prices move and the tract they wanted is gone, and the one that's left costs more for less. Every single time, the story is the same: not that they made a bad decision, but that they never actually made one, the market made it for them, by simply running out of patience for their patience. You don't have to be that story.

There's something coming at LANDZILLE that we're not fully unwrapping yet, new ground, new opportunity, closer than you would think, and it won't stay quiet for long once it's out. The people who reach out now, before the announcement, are the ones who will get first look, while people who wait for the official post will get whatever's left after everyone else has already moved.

So here's the walk-through, simplified: stop touring the land in your head. Come see it for real.

Reach out to LANDZILLE today via info@landzille.com because a conversation costs you nothing, and it might be the only thing standing between you and another year of "still thinking about it." The land isn't going to wait for you to feel ready.

Let's talk before it's someone else's!
