

LANDZILLE

E-MAGAZINE ISSUE NO. 17 | 01.08.2026

ISSUE DETAILS: AUGUST, 2026

YOUR TRUSTED GUIDE TO SMART LAND INVESTMENTS.

I AM LAND

NOT YET

THE MOST EXPENSIVE PHRASE IN TEXAS LAND.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

- 1. FROM THE CEO'S DESK: THE PATIENCE LIE 3
- 2. THE SIGNS YOU CALLED PATIENCE 4
- 3. WHY IT FEELS SMART TO WAIT 6
- 4. WHAT WAITING ACTUALLY COST YOU..... 8
- 5. MOSTLY WRONG 9
- 6. LANDZILLE RECOMMENDS: BOOK & EVENTS..... 12

1. FROM THE CEO'S DESK: THE PATIENCE LIE

You call it patience but it is not, It is fear that learned to dress well.

I have watched people wait two years for "the right deal." or even build spreadsheets so detailed they forgot the spreadsheet wasn't the investment. I have had conversations where someone tells me they are "almost ready" and I already know they said the same thing last year.

I am not saying this from outside because I have done it too, there was a parcel in Fannin County I looked at for four months, drove past it twice and even told myself I was being careful. The truth is I was scared of being wrong in front of people who would have trusted me if I said go. Here is what caution doesn't tell you while it's happening: it feels identical to wisdom, same calm voice and reasonable explanations. The difference only shows up later, when you look back and realize wisdom would have moved and fear just watched.

I am not telling you to buy blind, some deals deserve a no while some, fear is just good judgment wearing a plain shirt but most of the "waiting" I see isn't that. It is the version where nothing about the deal has changed in six months except the price, and your certainty that you will feel ready eventually.

You won't. Ready is a story you tell yourself after you have already moved.

That land in Fannin County was sold to someone else. I think about it more than I would like to admit. I stopped waiting to feel ready after that, now I just ask what I'm actually afraid of. Usually it isn't the deal. It is what people will think if I'm wrong.

I would rather be wrong than right and standing still.

That is the only difference between the man who bought the next parcel and the man still watching this one. Not smarter nor luckier, just done waiting to feel something that was never going to arrive on its own.

With warmth,

Akingbade Akinfenwa

Founder & CEO, Landzille

2. THE SIGNS YOU CALLED PATIENCE

Every county on this list has the same story underneath it: infrastructure moved first, population followed, price caught up last and the people who bought before the lake, before the highway upgrade, before the population count changed? they didn't have better information, they just stopped waiting for permission.

THREE NUMBERS TO SIT WITH

Hunt County's population has grown 47.58% since 2010 and most of that growth happened while people were "still deciding."

Bois d'Arc Lake alone spans roughly 16,600 acres and 86 miles of shoreline, a new lake built once in Texas, this generation.

Texas land prices have risen 8–12% annually since 2020, patience isn't neutral. It has a price tag, and the tag updates every year you don't move.

Here's what "waiting for the right deal" actually looks like on paper, county by county, right now.

Market	2026 Population	Growth Signal	Avg. Land Price/Acre	The Thing Waiting Costs You
Bonham / Fannin County	~39,265 (+10% since 2020)	Bois d'Arc Lake — 16,600 acres, 86 miles of new shoreline, driving new residential and recreational development around Bonham	~$90,105/acre countywide	A lakefront corridor that didn't exist five years ago
Leonard (Fannin Co.)	Riding the same county growth	Fannin's fastest-growing pocket, pulled by Bois d'Arc Lake spillover	Tracking county average, rising to ~$80,105/acre	Proximity pricing before the lake effect fully lands
Honey Grove (Fannin Co.)	Small-town base, rising interest	20 minutes from Bois d'Arc Lake and 20 minutes from the future Lake Ralph Hall	~$45,507/acre average across nearby farmland listings	Two new lakes, one town still priced like neither exists
Wolfe City (Hunt Co.)	1,528 (+9.2% since 2020)	Hunt County growing at 3.35% annually, 47.6% growth since 2010	County-driven, below DFW-adjacent pricing, rising to ~$68,105/acre	A county growing faster than almost anyone's watching
Roxton (Lamar Co.)	548, holding steady	Minutes from Bois d'Arc Lake and Lake Ralph Hall access	Regional comps averaging $30,105/acre	Quiet now, priced like it'll stay that way
Gainesville (Cooke Co.)	18,772 (+7.9% since 2020)	On I-35, one hour from DFW, capturing North Texas growth with shovel-ready development sites and tax incentives	Median home value $284,477	An interstate corridor town still priced like a stop-off

3. WHY IT FEELS SMART TO WAIT

There was a deal in Roxton two years ago, it was fast moving and everyone said move now or lose it. The buyer who walked away didn't get the land but six months later, the road that was supposed to open never did, the parcel sat landlocked, worth less than the asking price he would have almost paid rather he kept his money. He tells that story a lot, and he is right to.

There is another version of that story in Gainesville, a tract near the I-35 corridor, priced like the interstate traffic would turn it into something overnight. It didn't, not that year. The buyers who waited watched the price soften before it climbed again. Patience wasn't fear at that time, it was math, and the math worked out.

Caution has earned its reputation honestly and it has saved people from bad debt, bad partners, bad timing. Somewhere behind every person who "waited too long," there's another person who waited exactly long enough and never had to explain why. Texas land has moved 8 to 12 percent a year since 2020 but averages hide the years a parcel went nowhere, or backward, and the person who didn't buy looked like a genius for a while.

“

This is why at Landzille, we do not ask our investors to move on instinct, every acre we bring to a client has already been run against four questions: Can it be leased to a working farmer, so the land earns while it appreciates? Does it qualify for an Ag Exemption or the Legacy Nutrient Deduction, so the tax structure works in the owner's favor from day one? Can it stand as collateral, so the asset does more than sit? And is it inside a corridor where growth is already measurable, not promised? If a parcel doesn't clear those four, Landzille doesn't move no matter how loud the "move now or lose it" gets.

That is the difference between caution and diligence, caution is a feeling but diligence is four questions you ask every time, whether the deal feels urgent or not. This isn't about proving caution wrong because it is often right and that is what makes it so easy to trust, it doesn't always fail you, so you stop asking when it's lying to you and the stakes were never abstract nor the money, a semester of tuition. A down payment, a father's approval, or the fear of losing it. Nobody hesitates over nothing and nobody drives past a parcel twice because they're bored. But caution and hesitation don't always wear the same face, even when they sound identical in your head. One of them is reading the land, or reading the four questions Landzille asks before anyone else does. The other is just afraid of being seen getting it wrong.

4. WHAT WAITING ACTUALLY COST YOU

Dear reader,

I want to tell you what your patience has cost you, because no one else is going to do the math out loud. Two years ago, land outside Bonham was priced under $45,000 an acre. You said you were watching it, I believe you and I think you really were watching and checking the listing, running the numbers in your head, telling yourself you would move when the timing felt right.

The timing never felt right. I don't think it was supposed to.

That land is closer to $90,000 an acre now. I'm not writing this to make you feel misguided, you weren't mistaken, you were careful, and careful has served you before. Now, I need you to sit with this number for a second before you close the page: almost $30,000/acre gone, not stolen, just left on the table by two years of "not yet."

You weren't only watching Bonham, maybe it was Gainesville; an interstate town where land prices average $78,113 an acre today, up from far less before I-35 growth caught up to it, growing quietly while everyone assumed I-35 traffic was just noise passing through. Maybe it was Wolfe City, sitting where Highway 34 and Highway 11 cross, inside Hunt County, one of the counties in this region still officially inside the Dallas-Fort Worth metro, with its own Economic Development Corporation already courting what comes next, a county that grew 47 percent since 2010 while you decided it was "too small to matter yet." Maybe it was Honey Grove, twenty minutes from a lake that didn't exist five years ago, priced like the lake still doesn't.

I don't know which one was yours. I know there was one.

Here is the part I won't soften: the land didn't wait for permission, and neither did the people who bought it, they weren't smarter than you, they didn't have a number you didn't have access to. Rather they just stopped asking the market to promise them certainty before they would act on it.

I don't know what you were waiting for, maybe you don't either. But I have watched enough people wait to know it's rarely the deal they're unsure about. It's whether they trust themselves to be right.

You don't have to answer that here. I just didn't want you to keep waiting without knowing what it costs.

Still yours,
The Editorial desk

*$5,000/acre
gap in just two years.*

*$284,477
Median home value in Gainesville.*

*47% county
growth
since 2010.*

5. MOSTLY WRONG

CASE FILE — NORTH TEXAS LAND MARKET

Subject: The cost of standing still

Status: Closed. Reviewed for pattern.

ENTRY 1 — ROXTON, LAMAR COUNTY

A tract outside Roxton was flagged "overpriced" by three separate buyers in the same season. Each one of them walked away, fourteen months later, the same tract sold for 18 percent above the original asking price, once Bois d'Arc Lake spillover reached the area. The fear wasn't protecting anyone. It was just early.

Finding: The parcel didn't get riskier. The buyers just ran out of stories to tell themselves.

ENTRY 2 — BONHAM, FANNIN COUNTY

Fannin County land has climbed toward $90,000 an acre, up from under $45,000 two years ago. Every person who called that "too expensive already" in 2024 has since watched it get more expensive. Nobody who said no in Bonham that year has come back to say they were right.

Finding: Fear dressed as prudence, and the market didn't care what it was wearing.

ENTRY 3 — GAINESVILLE, COOKE COUNTY

Land near the I-35 corridor now averages $78,113 an acre and buyers who hesitated waiting for "more proof the interstate growth was real" paid more for the proof than they would have paid for the land itself.

Finding: By the time fear gets its evidence, the evidence is priced in.

ENTRY 4 — WOLFE CITY, HUNT COUNTY

The town sits at the intersection of State Highway 34 and State Highway 11 — a crossroads that's carried trade through Wolfe City since the railroad first arrived in 1887.. Hunt County itself falls inside the official Dallas-Fort Worth metropolitan statistical area, putting Wolfe City closer to metro infrastructure than its small-town price tag suggests. The town also runs its own Economic Development Corporation, actively courting the kind of investment that turns a crossroads into a corridor.

Finding: The infrastructure is already in place. The road, the metro designation, the development arm none of it is speculative.

ENTRY 5 — THE REGION, REVIEWED IN FULL

Not every county moved the same direction this year, some closed-sale data across parts of North Texas showed short-term softening, the kind analysts flag as a market catching its breath, not turning around. However, a pause is not a reversal and softness in a handful of closed transactions is not the same as a market that stopped growing.

Finding: The exception exists. It just isn't strong enough to build a decision on.

ASSESSMENT

Across the markets Landzille tracks, the pattern isn't close. Roxton, Bonham, and Gainesville all tell the same story: land waited for, not land avoided. Fear earns its keep only when it can point to a real, sustained pattern not a single soft quarter mistaken for a trend. Everywhere else in this file, fear costs money. It does not save it.

Case closed. Pattern noted.

6. LANDZILLE RECOMMENDS: BOOK & EVENTS

BOOK OF THE MONTH

LAND INVESTMENT 101 by Akingbade Akinfenwa

This book explores the fundamentals of land investment, covering key concepts, market trends, valuation, due diligence, and practical strategies for making informed land investment decisions. Download it free at RESOURCES

UPCOMING & RECENT EVENT:

THE NEXT ACRE IS YOURS IF YOU MOVE NOW !:

Roxton has been an incredible chapter, and Leonard is quickly becoming another success story. We're almost sold out on both projects, and we're grateful to everyone who has trusted Landzille with their investment journey. If Leonard has been on your radar, now is the time. Only one 1-acre parcel remains, and it comes with the full Landzille Experience: AG Exemption Filing to reduce your property taxes, lease-to-farmer income from day one, and the LND Process e-Guide to help you put your land to work immediately..The next chapter in smart land investment is live!

GEOTELA IS ALMOST HERE

Here's a look at the progress fueling that momentum. You can now follow our journey across every social platform @usegeotela, where the story unfolds in real time. Our user interface is complete and polished, and development is now fully underway, bringing every screen and feature to life with purpose. Want the juicy details on how Geotela is helping people discover verified insights on opportunities and places. Join our WHATSAPP CHANNEL today!

COMMUNITY EVENT RECAP

Our 2026 Summer Internship Program has officially come to an end, and it was an incredible experience! Our teens gained practical knowledge in cybersecurity, data privacy, AI, personal finance, money management, leadership, and land investment while building skills that will last a lifetime. Each participant received a Certificate of Participation and a Letter of Recommendation. The program also featured a hands-on visit to one of our land investment projects, giving students real-world exposure, before ending with a fun-filled outing of games, refreshments, and great memories. Thank you to every student, parent, facilitator, and partner who made this journey a success. See you next year!

www.landzille.com

Phone number: tel:+1\(214\)649-8495649-8495)

Email: info@landzille.com

Social media: IG (landzille).